

Yusuhara a Home from Home: 23. King's Coronation

Stephen Woodard

Over the past few years there have been many historical moments culturally, socially and politically most of which unfortunately seem to have been negative. The U.K has had its fair share too. From Brexit to the pandemic to the death of The Queen there has been no shortage of them. However, just over the horizon is something that is going to be monumental for the country.

May 6th sees the coronation of the new monarch of the UK King Charles III. While this will be a huge celebration across the country and the commonwealth there will be a lot of changes that will take a long time to fully form. Perhaps most notable is the change of national anthem from "God Save The Queen" to "God Save The King," a small change but one that represents the country on a nation stage. All currency and post stamps will need to be changed in order to show the king's face. All notes and coins will be reprinted and minted with previous coins being slowly phased out. The famous red postboxes scattered around the country will also see a new design bearing The King's Royal Cypher instead of The Queen's. Uniforms of military personal along with the police force will also be updated. If you are in the UK in the future, keep an eye out and you may see items or signage from two monarchs maybe even more.

The Tower of London Yeoman Warder uniform updated bearing the new Royal Cypher.